SUBJECT INFORMATION

The study of History of Early Modern Times (XVIth-XVIIIth centuries) is structured in two parts, closely related, under the name, the first, of Modern History. Economy and Society and, the second, Modern History. Politics and Culture. Both are taught, respectively, in the first and second semester of the second year of the degree of History of the UdL.

In the first part, Modern History. Economy and Society, special emphasis will be placed on raising the different debates about the profound economic and social changes of the period that are reflected in interrelated issues such as issues affecting the population, daily life and family, transformations of the main economic sectors (agriculture, manufacturing, commerce) and social change, all framed in the debate on the transition from feudalism to capitalism. The priority space to deal with the different issues will be Western civilization. The interrelation of teaching between the two parts seeks to achieve a global scientific knowledge of an era of transition between feudal society and the capitalist one, crucial in European and world history, which begins at the end of the Middle Ages (15th century) and ends to the beginnings of the contemporary era (19th century).
