Subject's extra information

Do you know that the art of the Early Modern period is characterized by the abundance of the nude?

Do you know that after centuries of ignorance about how to represent spatial depth, painters finally discover at this time how to achieve that illusion in their scenes?

Do you know why all the architects remained so faithful admirers of the ancient Greeks during this time?

This course explores the characteristic and distinctive features of the culture of the period of three centuries called the Early Modern period. Between the 16th and the 18th centuries, many stylistic and conceptual differences in culture and art occurred that generated the movements known as the Renaissance, Mannerism, Baroque, Rococo and Neoclassicism. However, in this subject we will insist on the cultural background underlying all the artistic manifestations of the period. We will dedicate ourselves especially to understanding scientific Naturalism and classical Humanism, ways of thinking that completely conditioned artists. We will thus understand modernity as a historical, social and philosophical category linked to the values of progress, reason and communication, economically associated with capitalism and socially linked with the bourgeoisie.

The great crisis of the Christian Church, which is irreconcilably fractured at this time between Protestants and Catholics, is also an event of wide cultural repercussion that plays an important role in the approach of the subject.

These phenomena, of course, far from being considered in the abstract, will be visualized through their manifestation in the visual arts. In architecture, we will focus on understanding the so-called "classical grammar" and the stylistic development of the main construction typologies. We will see how the forms of sculpture were conditioned throughout the period by humanistic culture and its development marked by the principle of naturalism. And we will discover how religious conflicts conditioned the development of pictorial genres beyond the common concern for perspective and for anatomical studies that are so determining of their forms.

Thus, in this first course, the understanding of the cultural unity of Early Modernity lays the foundations for delving into the peculiarities of the Italian Renaissance, the Baroque or Golden Age, and Neoclassicism in subsequent courses.

ART AND CULTURE OF THE MODERN AGE 2023-24

Master classes (M) and practical classes (P): Each class session includes a theoretical part and a practical part. The theoretical part is taught through master classes, supported by audiovisuals and readings, while the practical part consists of workshops and exercises to be carried out in class, to assimilate and apply the information received. Additionally, material to be worked on autonomously by the student will be recommended.

Attendance and participation in both parts of the class is mandatory – unless continuous evaluation is waived for demonstrable work reasons (1)

(1) To facilitate the combination of study with the development of work activities, as long as it is documented, the student has the right to waive attendance at synchronous sessions and continuous evaluation.

2. EARLY MODERN ARCHITECTURE

ALBERTI, Leon Battista: “De la arquitectura” en, De la pintura y otros escritos sobre arte, Madrid, Tecnos, 1999, pp. 145-194.

Esta edición contiene una excelente introducción al papel de Alberti como primer humanista en las artes.

ARNAU, Joaquín: Palladio: 1508-2008: una visión de la Antigüedad, Valencia, General de Ediciones de Arquitectura, 2008.

De las muchas aproximaciones a Palladio, esta destaca su rol humanista.

BENEVOLO, Leonardo: Historia de la Arquitectura del Renacimiento. La arquitectura clásica (del siglo XV al siglo XVIII), Barcelona, GG, 1988.

CASTEX, Jean: Renacimiento, barroco y clasicismo: historia de la arquitectura, 1420-1720, Madrid, Akal, 1994. Aunque por momentos es complejo, su enfoque es original: aborda la evolución de las plantas en todo el período, vinculandolas con los modelos clásicos.

SUMMERSON, John: El lenguaje clásico de la arquitectura, Barcelona, Gustavo Gili, 1988.

WITTKOVER, Rudolf: Los fundamentos de la arquitectura en la edad del humanismo, Madrid, Alianza forma, 2002. Obra fundamental

ZEVI, Bruno: “Las leyes y las medidas del espacio del siglo XV”, “Volumetría y plástica del siglo XVI” y “El movimiento y la interpenetración en el espacio barroco” en, Saber ver la arquitectura, Madrid, Alianza forma, 2002, pp. 81-97

Dos capítulos que sintetizan de forma clara las principales concepciones espaciales del Renacimiento y Barroco.

3. EARLY MODERN SCULPTURE

ALBERTI, Leon Battista: "De la escultura" en, De la pintura y otros escritos sobre arte, Madrid, Tecnos, 1999, pp.144-194.

Aunque es de gran valor histórico puede resultar de complicada lectura por su tecnicismo.

CEYSSON, Bernard: La escultura. 1. La tradición de la escultura antigua desde el siglo XV al XVIII, Barcelona, Skira, 1996.

Uno de los pocos que revisa las principales obras escultóricas del periodo completo.

FLYNN, Tom: El cuerpo en la escultura, Madrid, Akal, 2002 (1998)

POPE-HENNESSY, John: La escultura italiana en el Renacimiento, Madrid, Nerea, 1998

POPE-HENNESSY, John: Italian high renaissance and baroque sculpture, Oxford, Phaidon, 1986

Ambas obras de Pope Hennessy presentan la estructura más afin a lo que esta asignatura propone: una organización de las piezas escultóricas de acuerdo a los géneros que tuvieron más desarrollo en el periodo cronológico de época moderna.

WITTKOVER, Rudolf: La escultura: procesos y principios, Madrid, Alianza, 2006.

Su aproximación es técnica. Especialmente interesante su capítulo sobre Bernini.

4. EARLY MODERN PAINTING

CHECA, Fernando; MORAN, Jose Miguel: El Barroco, Madrid, Itsmo, 1982.

Hace menciones sueltas sobre la pervivencia del clasicismo en el barroco.

FIERO, Gloria: The Humanistic Tradition book 4, Londres, Mc Graw Hill, 2011

KENNETH, Clark: El arte del humanismo, Madrid, Alianza, 1988.

No traza un desarrollo continuo de la relación arte-humanismo, sino capítulos monográficos sobre artistas u obras específicas.

POPE-HENNESSY, John: El Retrato en el Renacimiento, Madrid, Akal, 1985

Como uno de los géneros humanistas por excelencia, el análisis sobre las sutiles variaciones que experimenta el retrato es estupendo. Lástima que solo abarca el incio del período.

KEMP, Martin: La Ciencia del Arte: la óptica en el arte occidental de Brunelleschi a Seurat, Madrid, Akal, 2000.

Muy completo estudio cronológico de los variados problemas relativos la optica incluyendo la perspectiva.

WRIGHT, Lawrence: Tratado de Perspectiva, Barcelona, Stylos, 1985.

Recomendable como complemento para entender algunos conceptos.

CLARK, Kenneth: El desnudo, Madrid, Alianza, 1981. [UdL]
