Methodology

In accordance with objectives, competences and contents, different types of methodologies will be combined based on each session and subject (master classes, seminars or debates, for example). Thus, the combination of theoretical and practical sessions is considered essential. For this reason, the student will have read previously the literary documents planned for each session and will be asked for the oral presentation of aspects related to the content. Likewise, he will develop written papers in order to deepen in the subject and to consolidate his learning process. The student counts on individualized and in group tutorials to clarify theoretical and methodological axes.

Teaching methodologies: Theoretical-practical teaching. Practical activities in small groups. Conferences and colloquiums attendance. Classroom discussions. Problem-based learning. Individual tutorials to facilitate the acquisition of the necessary skills in the subject. Independent study work. Work with synchronized accompaniment with the professor.

This teaching guide will be expanded with more technical details in a document (entitled "Program") in the "Resources" section of the virtual campus.
