Subject contents

Study of various authors and representative works of the Hispanic literary tradition in light of the most recent theories and methodologies devoted to the analysis of discourses on women, gender and sexuality in Iberian and Latin American cultures:

Theme 1.- "Woman" and "gender": theories and methodologies.

Theme 2.- The genealogy of Hispanic women writers: from the Middle Ages to the 18th century.

Theme 3.- Women as subject and object of literary creation: 19th-21st centuries.

Methodology

In accordance with objectives, competences and contents, different types of methodologies will be combined based on each session and subject (master classes, seminars or debates, for example). Thus, the combination of theoretical and practical sessions is considered essential. For this reason, the student will have read previously the literary documents planned for each session and will be asked for the oral presentation of aspects related to the content. Likewise, he will develop written papers in order to deepen in the subject and to consolidate his learning process. The student counts on individualized and in group tutorials to clarify theoretical and methodological axes.

Teaching methodologies: Theoretical-practical teaching. Practical activities in small groups. Conferences and colloquiums attendance. Classroom discussions. Problem-based learning. Individual tutorials to facilitate the acquisition of the necessary skills in the subject.

This teaching guide will be expanded with more technical details in a document (entitled "Program") in the "Resources" section of the virtual campus.
