Methodology

The methodology for this course includes:

- Lectures introducing major topics and providing contextual frameworks.
- Classroom debates at the end of some of the units. Lecturer will provide some questions based on films/clips that students will have watched at home. Debates may take place on-line.
- Gamification activities: for some of the units, revision of the contents can take place using the gamification resources of the virtual campus.
- Self study: students will have to read and prepare a selection of units from the book Britain for Learners of English by James O'Driscoll. These will be assessed through on-line quizzes.
- A field trip to Liverpool (optional) that will take place during the semester depending on number of people interested and availability. The trip is organized around a series of activities that take place in some of the city's most emblematic buildings/institutions and which are intended to make the students reflect on historical, social, and cultural issues introduced in class.

WRITTEN ASSIGNMENT: Students will have to hand in one written assignment. Exact instructions and a rubric will be provided at the beginning of the semester.

CLASS PARTICIPATION: We will take into account quality and not just quantity of interventions. After class discussions, we may establish follow-up on-line questions to encourage participation.

VERY IMPORTANT: Students who take part in the field trip to Liverpool will have to hand in a COMPULSORY exercise on their return (date to be determined). In group, they'll have to prepare a review of the trip focusing on the (academic) highlights. The review should focus especially on how the experience has contributed to the understanding of the history and society of the UK. The information should be presented in an attractive and original format (a poster, a power point, a clip, etc.) since the best exercises will be published in the Department's web page. Take into account that they should also be brief and clear for those who access the information in order to get the gist of the experience. Before the trip, we will give further details if needed.
