Subject's extra information

This course will analyze the international system for the protection of women's rights, which has been progressively developed and which today constitutes one of the branches of public international law. The current regulations that make up said system will be studied, as well as the parallel action of social movements and non-governmental organizations that have contributed to its adoption. Specific attention will be paid to the Gender and Human Rights Based Approach. Finally, the existing control mechanisms will be analyzed to achieve the effective application of the standards.

Learning objectives

OBJECTIVES
